Rev. Joseph Cook Dissected Secundum

Dear Dispatch: I have just heard the reat Boston talkist, the orator, the lecurer, Rev. Joseph Cook, of whom they Cook is a born orator. Mr. Cook's physique is of the large, stout, aldermanic style-round and "capor-lined." A $225 lecture has a normal tendency to develop adepose tissue. He puffs and blows under it. His eyes are peculiar. I define them naturally very large, very pale gray,. He has a wonderful way of stretching them larger as a means of emchasis. He has a Ben.-Butlerish way whom, by the way, he does not love much) of drooping one of the lids so as to almost conceal the eye. His gesture is wild, irregular, angular, incoherent, and sometimes, when he "saws the air," frantic; his voice loud, coarse, rookish, until he affects the gentle and winning-then husky-and cultivated (but not much); at times measured, slow, but closing his sentences very rapidly—so rapidly as to clip his words, and rendering many of them indistinctly. He hems and haws quite often, after that hateful, vulgar imitation of English speakers, which many of our public speakers affect who have "been abroad' and admitted to the galleries of the English Parliament-a-hem-aw, a drawl-aw, a justcan't-remember-aw what I am-aw going to say-aw-a sort of uncertain, drawling way of finishing sentences. Mr. Cook has a good deal of this. His head and forebead, and indeed his whole face, is singularly like Mr.

With little about the orator to attract or fascinate, I could not possibly find wherein as a popular lecturer his strength lay. His arguments-indeed the entire lecturewould have been eminently proper and useful before a grave body of senators, or before a high court. His style is argumentative-statistical, judicial, and logical-with no rhetorical flights or fancies, no stage-trick or clap-trap, no "poet's eye in fine phrenzy rolling," though it would often "glance from heaven to earth, from earth to heaven," for that was a frequent gesture of his. A Masonie Incident. [From the New Orleans Times.]

One of the interesting incidents of the enidemic is told below: return to his home in Chicago he communicated the facts to the Garden City Lodge of Masons, of which he was a member. The Lodge made an appropriation to purchase for its faithful nurse a nest gold watch and chain, which, suitably inscribed, was forwarded to her by the Master of the Lodge.

Effects of the Paris Exhibition.

[From the New York Sun.] From Paris the news is that the city is becoming more habitable. It is no longer the closing days of the Exhibition are not the least prosperous. The present daily average of visitors is 200,000. The French visitors are now mainly of the middle and working-classes. The amount of money spent by the foreigners seems to have surpassed all anticipations. But it is observed that the distribution of it is not even. While fortunes have been made by hotel- and restaurantkeepers, and by dry goods merchants and milliners, most of the other branches of trade have remained dull. It is hoped, however, that a general revival of business will take place as soon as the Exhibition is closed. All the hotels will have to renew their furniture and to go into general repairs. The retail trade will have to lay in new stocks of goods, and the return of the wealthy classes to Paris is expected to infuse new life into all those trades which the presence of a mass of transient foreigners has rendered stagnant. Curiously enough, the two classes of business-men who have suffered most through the influx of foreigners are the jewellers and the keepers of bathing establishments. Naturally the visitors to the Exhibition have had no money to spend on jewelry. The prices of everything were so exorbitant that it has been all they could do to pay their way. The fact that the bathing establishments have lost money is said to be a direct consequence of the uncleanly habits of the Germans, the Russians, the Italians, and the least once a week to one of the bathing establishments of his neighborhood. But the foreign visitors seem to have been so abthat they did not find time to wash themselves at all.

To this the plaintiffs demurred on the ground that it did not constitute a defence. The arguments on this demurrer will be heard on the first Monday in October.
